From the roof of Abyssinia to the doorstep of the arctic... Last time we travelled with world-famous photographer and adventurer Vincent Munier, he was on a quest to find the elusive wolf of the Ethiopian highlands.

In this new second episode, Vincent heads like a lone wolf to the national parks of Norway, gateway to the arctic, on a different quest - to conquer the harsh landscape and climate that is the endless, snowy tundra of the far north. After all, it is deep in the heart of the most extreme conditions that you see wild animals at their most glorious, says Vincent. And to discover a mysterious, fascinating wildlife (moose, musk ox, brown bear, wild reindeer), he plunges into this awe-inspiring ruggedness as discreetly as he can, traveling by foot, dogsled, or on skis, finding refuge in an abandoned ranger cabin or sleeping under the starlight of the open, arctic skies.
